

Robert I. Adler

Robert I. Adler has served as the President of Financial Recovery Technologies since early 2012. Adler oversees a team of financial and technology experts that provide a turnkey solution to recovering funds for institutional investors made available in securities class action settlements, both domestic and international.

Previously, Adler co-founded CCBN and served as its president from the company's inception in 1997 until its sale to Thomson Reuters in 2004. CCBN was a pioneer in enabling communications over the web between public companies and the investment community. Through its IR website and webcasting services CCBN transformed how companies share information with their shareholders, and its StreetEvents product offering, including real-time, full-text transcripts of quarterly earnings calls, dramatically improved the day-to-day productivity of Wall Street analysts and portfolio managers.

An inveterate entrepreneur, Adler has founded and led a number of technology companies outside of financial services as well, including WordStream, go2 Media, and DigiTrace Care Services (aka SleepMed). He also serves as an advisor to a number of Boston-based early stage companies including HRM Direct, Finalta, Custom Made, and OpenExchange Communications.

Adler graduated with a Bachelor's of Arts from Brown University and a Master's of Business Administration from Harvard University where he was a Baker Scholar. He currently serves as an Adjunct Professor in the Arthur M. Blank Center for Entrepreneurship at Babson College. He also serves on the Jimmy Fund Visiting Committee at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.
